

Paige Prescott

Paige Prescott is currently a PhD candidate at the University of New México. She is interested in the learning sciences in relation to acquiring computer science and knowledge and computational thinking skills. She regularly conducts teacher professional development for teachers new to computer science and is the President of the New Mexico Chapter of the Computer Science Teachers Association where she is overseeing the various facets of computing education in the state, including: expanding the opportunities for teacher professional development, computer science education policy and connecting the students and teachers to opportunities in the technology industries.